

CGI Advantage Grant Lifecycle Management

Managing grants can be time-consuming, labor-intensive, and costly for state and local governments. Paper processing, redundant data entry, inconsistent processes and a general lack of collaboration increase the risk of lost funding.

Many organizations utilize spreadsheets to manually manage grant proposals, which impedes the ability to track and distribute grant funds effectively. Yet grants are the number one way organizations secure the supplemental funds necessary to support critical citizen services.

Governments need a centralized solution that streamlines the management of grant funds throughout the entire lifecycle. Timely and accurate information can improve decision-making, reduce the risk of lost funds and increase opportunities to provide support where it is most needed.

Grant Lifecycle Management at a glance

Organizations that pursue additional grant funds due to changes in funding structures will especially benefit from a unified solution. By managing each stage in the lifecycle centrally, from opportunity to closing, governments improve efficiency, accuracy and productivity. Greater access to information improves control and allows for the analysis of funding streams to understand “lost” funds and increase the capture of new funds.
